MARK ROBINSON graduated in geography at Leeds University and then took an MSc in Engineering Hydrology at Newcastle University. After joining the research staff at Leeds University and working on studies of soil erosion, he moved to the Natural Environment Research Council and currently works as a Senior Scientific Officer at the Institute of Hydrology in Oxfordshire. His research interests include the effects upon river flows of man's activities, such as forestry and agriculture.

DR RAINE MORGAN is Bibliographer at the Institute of Agricultural History, University of Reading, where she completed her doctorate in 1979 on farming techniques in England between the seventeenth and nineteenth centuries. Recent publications include Dissertations on British Agrarian History: a Select List of Theses Awarded Higher Degrees in British and Foreign Universities between 1876 and 1978 (Reading, 1981) and Farm Tools, Implements and Machines in Britain: Pre-history to 1945 (Reading, 1984). She is currently working on an historiographical survey and bibliography of the literature on policies on British agriculture and food supply, 1880-1945.
