

Notes on contributors

MARK BAILEY is Professor of Later Medieval History at the University of East Anglia, and High Master of St Paul's School, London. He has recently published a monograph on the decline of serfdom in late-medieval England, and is currently extending some of the book's themes through further research on rural migration and the 'seigniorial reaction' after the Black Death. Address: School of History, University of East Anglia, Norwich, NR4 7TJ; email: mark.bailey@uea.ac.uk

JOHN CHAPMAN was formerly Principal Lecturer in Historical Geography at the University of Portsmouth. He is chairman of the Southern History Society and on the committee overseeing production of the new Victoria County History of Hampshire. He has published extensively on various aspects of enclosure in England and Wales and is continuing with this research in his retirement. Email: john.chapman@port.ac.uk

TINE DE MOOR is Professor of Institutions for Collective Action in Historical Perspective at the Department of History and Art History at Utrecht University. She is the principal investigator of the Institutions for Collective Action Research team, and member of the knowledge center, Institutions of the Open Society, both based at Utrecht University. She co-ordinates several large projects, amongst an ERC-project entitled "United we stand". Dynamics and consequences of institutions for collective action in pre-industrial Europe'. She has published in several high-ranking journals on, in particular, the evolution and functioning of various kinds of institutions for collective action, in Europe in recent history and today. Recently, she has been elected as the next President of the International Association for the Study of the Commons (IASC). RENÉ VAN WEEREN obtained his BA in History at Utrecht University in 2010. He is research assistant in the Institutions for Collective Action research team at the Department of History and Art History at Utrecht University. More information on the authors and their research can be found at the research website www.collective-action.info. Address: T. de Moor, Department of History and Art History, Utrecht University, Drift 4-6, 3512 BS Utrecht; email: t.demoor@uu.nl

SHAMI GHOSH is a Mellon Postdoctoral Fellow at the Pontifical Institute of Mediaeval Studies in Toronto, a post he came to after earlier postdoctoral research fellowships at the University of Leicester, and Magdalen College, Oxford. His research interests range from medieval historical writing in Latin and the Germanic vernaculars (the subject of his 2009 doctoral dissertation) to global economic history in the early modern centuries. The principal focus of his research for the past several years and in the foreseeable future is the economic and social history of rural southern Germany c.800–c.1600. Address: Pontifical Institute of Mediaeval Studies, 59 Queen's Park Crescent East, Toronto, Ontario, Canada M5S 2C4; e.mail: shami.ghosh@utoronto.ca.

ANDREW GODLEY is Professor of Management and Business History and Director of the Henley Centre of Entrepreneurship at the Henley Business School, University of Reading. He has served as a Trustee of the Business History Conference, Secretary of the Association of Business Historians, and on the Organizing Committee of the inaugural World Congress of Business History. His research covers a wide range of topics on technological change and consumer reception, most recently a project on the role played by supermarkets in facilitating the reception of intensively reared poultry meat in the UK. Address: Henley Centre for Entrepreneurship, Henley Business School, University of Reading, Whiteknights, Reading, RG6 6UD; email: a.c.godley@henley.ac.uk

TIM SOENS is associate professor of medieval and environmental history at the University of Antwerp, Belgium and currently research fellow at Utrecht University, the Netherlands, collaborating on the ERC-Advanced-project, 'Coordinating for Life. Success and failure of Western European societies in coping with rural hazards and disasters, 1300–1800' (Bas van Bavel). Within the Antwerp Centre for Urban History he coordinates a research line on the Environmental and Rural History of Urbanized Societies. His own research and publications cover different aspects of the historical interaction between societies and nature, with a particular focus on water and flood disasters in the pre-modern period. Email: tim.soens@uantwerpen.be.

PIETER DE GRAEF is PhD candidate at the University of Antwerp, Belgium. In 2011, he graduated at the same institution with a Master's thesis, on the subject of the first generation farming households in the re-embanked Polder of Kallo (c.1665–c.1710). His current PhD research deals with the impact of urban manure and industrial waste as a fertiliser in the eighteenth-century Flemish Husbandry. Email: pieter.degraef@uantwerpen.be

DAVID R. STEAD is a lecturer in agricultural, food and environmental policy at the School of Agriculture and Food Science, University College Dublin. He is a past president, and the current treasurer, of the Agricultural Economics Society of Ireland, and has published articles on a variety of economic aspects of English and Irish agricultural and rural history. These include: 'Economic change in south-west Ireland, 1960–2009', Rural History 22 (2011). Address: Agriculture and Food Science Centre, University College Dublin, Belfield, Dublin 4, Ireland; email: david.stead@ucd.ie

ABIGAIL WOODS is a historian of science, technology and medicine. She lectured for eight years at Imperial College before taking up the post of Reader in the History of Human and Animal Health at Kings College London. Reflecting her earlier career as a veterinary surgeon, her research focuses on the history of livestock health and agriculture in modern Britain, the evolution of veterinary medicine, practice and policy, and its interconnections with human medicine. Her recent work grapples with the manifestations and meanings of agricultural modernity, and adopts a critical perspective on some of its commonly accepted features. Contact address: Department of History, Kings College London, Strand, London WC2R 2LS; email: abigail.woods@kcl.ac.uk